Standing Up, Speaking Out, Fighting Back in the Era of Privatization

This new book is urgently needed today to equip teachers in their fight against NO Child Left Behind mandates, the grinding drive toward standardization and high-stakes tests, and the efforts—especially here in Los Angeles— to pry open the education ‘market’ and privatize the futures of our children.

Letters to a Young Teacher is a reflection on a lifetime of struggle for the idea that every child has the right to equal, integrated, quality education. And teachers know best how to provide a joyous education. We need a new civil rights movement, the author argues, to defend these ideas from the attacks that they are facing.

Come to a discussion about the fight for the right to educate all our children equally with hope, creativity, curiosity, joy, wonder, and critical inquiry. The new civil rights movement starts here.
