This episode of "God in America" explores the religious and political aspirations of conservative evangelicals' moral crusade over divisive social issues. The 2008 election brought the re-emergence of a religious voice to the Democratic Party, bringing the country to a new place in the struggle to reconcile faith with politics. Following that election, President Obama acknowledged America's religious pluralism in his inaugural address. "We are a nation of Christians and Muslims, Jews and Hindus, and nonbelievers."

This film will give us the opportunity to discuss where we are today on the religious front following the 2012 election and how much the wall of separation of church and state is honored. We can ask what it says about us if we have strong anti-Islamic feeling in our country. And what does it mean if the Democrats feel compelled to put God back in their platform—and does it belong there.

We all look forward to a spirited discussion to get the year off to a good start. There is no charge for the film and come early for a good seat and socializing and snacks.
