The religious right is now more poised than ever before to abolish the separation of church and state. Equality of believers and non-believers hangs by a thread in the United States Supreme Court. Eddie Tabash, a Los Angeles area constitutional lawyer and chair of the Legal Committee of Americans United for Separation of Church and State will provide a powerful historical demonstration of how the Framers intended to create a government that is neutral in matters of religion. He will then discuss the current threats to secular government, including the latest Supreme Court cases.

Eddie Tabash is a Los Angeles area constitutional lawyer. He has filed amicus briefs arguing for the equal rights of believers and non-believers before the United States Supreme Court, the California Supreme Court and the California Court of Appeal. His best known work is his brief before the California Supreme Court in that Court's first same sex marriage case, in which he argued that confining marriage to heterosexuals was a concept based on religious beliefs and thus unconstitutional. He also chairs the board of directors of the Center for Inquiry, the Committee for Skeptical Inquiry, and the Council for Secular Humanism.
