Steven Velkei was the lead trial counsel in the successful lawsuit to regain control of Hoag Hospital and gain their independence from Providence Health. He concentrates on complex litigation matters and investigations, and has tried cases nationwide. Mr. Velkei gets great satisfaction out of taking difficult cases and succeeding where others have failed. Mr. Velkei also provides strategic risk assessment services to avoid litigation while advancing the client's business goals. He has lectured extensively on government investigations and enforcement actions, trial technique and diversity within the legal profession.

For three years, Mr. Velkei acted as chair of the US Diversity and Inclusion Committee for the world's largest law firm. He has also consulted with private companies on best practices for promoting diversity in the workplace, and has lectured on regulatory issues and trial advocacy. Mr. Velkei is from a diverse background. He is LGBTQ. His mother is Latina, his father is from Hungary, and his husband is African American. Mr. Velkei is involved with a number of major charitable groups in the Los Angeles area and is active politically. He serves on the Steering Committee of GOOD Guys, an advocacy group for greater equality for women in the workplace and associated with the National Conference of Women's Bar Associations. He is the first man to serve in that capacity.
